Sharing the Look of Champions

CHARLOTTE - A pair of heptathletes have many competitions, victories ahead of them.

The young women of the heptathlon pushed until they couldn't feel their fatigue, through the last put of the shot, the final launch in the long jump, and the concluding step of the sun-soaked 800 m run.

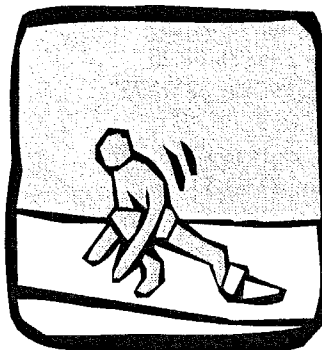

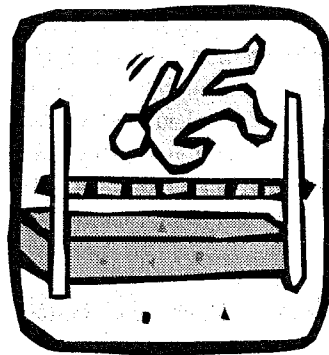

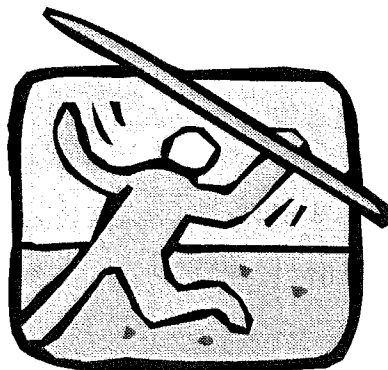

When the seventh event ended, they scampered - some with limps, some panting wildly - off the track.

Streaming off the steamy UNC-Charlotte Irwin Belk Track, Nicole Kelly and Jill Kovalcik left in different directions. Just like they came.

The slender, muscular-shouldered teens reunited on the podium, Nicole Kelly taking the young women's gold (4550 points) and Jill Kovalcik in fourth place (4202). There, in the infield with their necks collared by medals they shook hands and met for the first time, though they had raced for two days, aware of the other's athletic prowess. They are quite similar athletes, the kind that push and charge despite a lead. They chase superlatives. Though only one of them could be the best.

They came from small towns where they signed autographs posed for pictures and shyly smiled when people asked them when they were going out of town for the Games. They are their towns track stars. They dream of being Olympians and following in the footsteps of former AAU Junior Olympic Games alumni, Jackie Joyner Kersee.

Nicole and Jill know they will probably see each other on another track some day. Champions think that way!
